A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, the St. Albans Bank, a corporation, duly incorporated by the Legislature of the State of Vermont, located and doing business at St. Albans, in the county of Franklin, has made application to me, requesting me to issue a proclamation designating some day for the termination of the existence of said corporation;

And whereas, it has been made to appear to me that two-thirds of the legal votes of the stockholders of said corporation were given in favor of said application;

Now, therefore, I, Paul Dillingham, Governor of the State of Vermont, in conformity with said application, and the provisions of section eighty-six and eighty-seven of chapter eighty-nine of the General Statutes of Vermont, do hereby (a) issue my proclamation, and declare that on the twenty-fifth day of March, A. D. 1868, the said corporation shall cease to exist as fully and with the same effect as if said charter expired by the limitation thereof.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto signed my name and caused the seal of the State to be hereunto affixed, in Executive Chamber at Waterbury, this 23rd day of September, A. D. 1867, and of the independence of the United States the 91st.

PAUL DILLINGHAM.

By the Governor, WM. P. DILLINGHAM, Sec'y of Civil and Military Affairs.

ALLOWANCED.

Nine o'clock, and a brilliant December morning, with the sunshine tipping the icicles with diamonds, and the canary in the window warbling as if he fancied himself in the very heart of the tropics. Breakfast had been over some fifteen or twenty minutes in the well-organized household of the Daters, the fire of anthracite coal glowed and crackled in the polished grate, and Mrs. Dater's stand of monthly roses tossed their crimson crests of bloom opposite, as if they were fully determined to convict the almanac of being in a fundamental mistake about the weather.

"Nine o'clock—and high time I was down at my office," said Mr. Dater to himself as he glanced at the little bronze clock upon its bracket between the windows.

It was the delay of but a few minutes to exchange his embroidered slippers for snugly fitting boots, and to hang away the bright colored dressing gown, with its crimson lining and vividly tinted silk tassels—and Mr. Dater was just prepared to emerge into the street, when there was a rustle of soft draperies along the hall, and a tall, bright eyed woman, carrying a rosy baby in her arms, confronted him.

"Are you going down town so soon, Edward?"

"So soon, my dear? It is after nine o'clock," and Mr. Dater made a feint of pulling off the baby's waxen pink nose, and afterward displaying it wedged tightly between the first and second fingers of his hand.

"Yes, but—I wanted to speak to you before you went away this morning."

"Speak away, then, my love! Hallo, you Sir!" (to the baby); "have you no respect for your venerable father's whiskers?"

Mrs. Dater hesitated and colored a little as she played with the baby's blue and white worsted sock. Mrs. Dater was a blonde, and the creeping shadows of crimson were rather becoming to her than otherwise.

"Edward," she said, hurriedly, as if the subject were one she would fain get over as soon as possible, "I would like a little money to-day, if you could spare it just as well as not."

"Money, Maria, money!" Mr. Dater trifles no longer with the cowering baby; but stood up very straight, with his eyebrows elevated, and his eyes exceedingly wide open and unwinking.

"I believe you had your month's allowance as usual, Mrs. Dater!"

"Yes, but I have had more than the usual housekeeping expenses to meet within the last few days," explains his wife nervously. "The cook has raised her wages from fourteen dollars to sixteen, and—"

"Get a new cook, then!"

"But Ellen is so neat and economical; I really do not think I should be consulting my best interests by making a change. Besides, the water-pipes have been out of order, and the bill has come in for the papering we had done last fall, and flour is a good deal higher than it was, and—"

"I see—I see, my dear," interrupted Mr. Dater, irritably; "you can spare yourself any further details which may conveniently serve to hide the simple fact of extravagance and bad management. There are always plenty of excuses for that sort of thing when one wants them."

Mrs. Dater bit her lip and colored crimson.

"Edward, you have no right to make such an assertion as that. I am neither extravagant nor a bad manager."

"So you think, Maria, no doubt; but here is direct evidence to the contrary starting you point-blank in the face—"

"One hundred and fifty dollars a month, Mrs. Dater, ought to be sufficient for any family who don't dine off gold plate or eat melted pearls!"

"One hundred and fifty dollars a month is only five dollars a day, Edward."

"Only five dollars a day!" echoed her husband, with eyes rolled up toward the ceiling. "Only five dollars, Mrs. Dater! Let me tell you five dollars ought to be a great plenty if there is any sort of economy practiced in its expenditure. I do not spend five dollars a day Mrs. Dater."

"How much do you spend, Edward?"

"How much do I spend? I—I don't see what that has to do with the matter, Mrs. Dater. One thing I am entirely convinced of, however; I could discharge all this family's expenditures for five dollars a day."

"Under all circumstances?"

"Under all circumstances, Mrs. Dater!"

Mrs. Dater smiled incredulously.

"I do not think you could, Edward."

"I know I could, Maria," said the husband, dogmatically. "I don't think any thing about it."

"Then I wish you would just try, for once," said Mrs. Dater, fairly out of patience. "I am tired of this old Egyptian business of making bricks without straw. I can not meet the expenses of this establishment of seven persons for five dollars a day, and there is no sort of use in wearing out my patience, my temper, and my nervous system in trying any further. I have done my best, without much appreciation, as it appears, and now it only remains for me to follow the example of the English Chancellor of the Exchequer when his financial operations don't meet with approval—resign!"
